We give you the option of picking the size you want. Size A is bigger, quicker to establish and bloom, and best for quick results. Choose the smaller B size for growing on or mass plantings.

Please be aware, most of our daylilies are in limited supply and sell out quickly. We do try and update and add to inventory through the growing season.

Large healthy roots ensures good strong regrowth. Plants are dug just prior to shipping.

Plants have a water proof plastic label.

Choose your size.

We sell either large 3-4 fans pieces = "A" or 2 fans pieces ="B"

A size 3-4 fans: Blooming size

B size 1-2 fans: Growing size

Ordering From Olallie Daylily Gardens

If you'd like to order via mail, just mail a list of what you would like to order with your phone number and/or email address and we'll call or email and finalize your order. Otherwise, you'll find all our daylilies at daylilygarden.com

Jack, Dante & Pip are a key component to the farm operations. Beside keeping varmints away, the add wonderful companionship.

Lucy has all the proper tools for dividing. A pair of scissors for cutting back foliage and a dandelion fork for prying the clumps apart. And a mosquito net if the mosquitos get too bad.

A newly divided daylily clump is divided into bunches of 3-4 fan pieces. All are carefully handled to ensure large healthy rootstock.

Rowed out daylilies are hand planted in nice straight rows. Compost is added to the soil when planting.

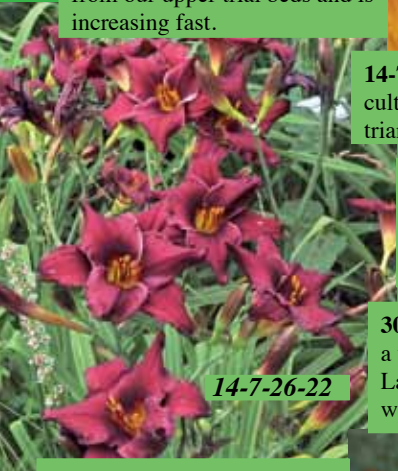
New Hybrids 2025

8-04-25 & 183-21: A couple of new eyezone cultivars that bloomed in 2025. I'm excited to see more blooms from these, and others.

3-80-25: This cultivar with it's glowing gold-orange coloration evokes a sunset sky. This came from our upper trial beds and is increasing fast.

14-7-26-22: This red-purple cultivar produces masses of unusual triangular shaped blooms .



3-80-1-25: I love the cool colors of pale cream accented with green. 2025 was the first time this daylily bloomed

309-21: A chance discovery, this is somehow a variant/offspring of my very late RR Red. Larger, deeper in color than RR Red. Blooming well in October too. Frost stopped it's bloom.

1-21: This June blooming lily, sports stippling in the form of small dots, creating an unusual color pattern.

8-04-25: Blooming in September, with luscious shades of cream & yellow. First bloom in 2025

8-05-25: A large number of hybrids were produced from crosses with a deep burgundy 'DOMINIC'. All are in deep shades of red and purple.

Hemerocallis fulva and it's derivatives.

H. fulva is one of those daylilies that you either love or hate. Potentially invasive because of it's spreading habit. But also there in lies it's greatest benefit. An established stand of H. fulva can become enormous with thousands of blooms. Salt tolerant (as are all daylilies), they will even grow (though not bloom well) in shady locations.

A few hybrids have been created from H. fulva. These are in general non-speading in shades of orange. Tall like H. fulva they are perfect where such height is needed in the garden as they stay where they're put.

Hemerocallis Citrina species and varieties

H. citrina and it's various varities are much overlooked in my opinion. Lemony yellow shades on tall to extremely tall scapes. Once a clump is established they will resist incursion by all weeds Foliage is always impeccable with a rich green color. The scapes are typically heavily branched and frequently in a way that is decorative in itself.

Iron clad hardy the H. citrina and types are guaranteed to be a mainstay or centerpiece in your garden for decades, if not longer.

I've hybridized heavily with H. citrina and types, as the variation in form and scape type and height is amazingly varied and fascinating.

I also liken the fact that the flowers are yellow shades to a black and white photograph. The yellow doesn't distract for the the plants form and allows one to experience the wonderful growth characteristics of the plant.

Pigmented Scape types

The pigmentation adds to the long season appeal of a daylily's overall appearence. Before the flowers even open the dark pigmentation jumps out at you from a distance. Additionally the dark scapes and buds contrast nicely with the blooms.
